

Jenny Pinto

This designer loves paper and makes it the old-fashioned way using agricultural and craft waste fibres like banana, sisal, mulberry, pineapple and various kinds of river grasses. And with this unique range of beautiful, translucent and textured paper, Pinto designs a truly organic range of lights, home accessories and stationery from her studio in Bangalore. Like this ceiling light called Oyster Mush, which has been handmade from banana fibre.

Zeba

From drapes to upholstery to bed linen to cushions, textile products with unusual textures and embellishments has always been Zeba design director Krsna Mehta's forte. So it was only a matter of time before he introduced fabric lamps. These Disc Lights have metal frames covered with embroidered silk (left), while the lampshade (above) has a leaf pattern on raw silk.
